

27 Things we can learn from world leaders of the past: Lincoln, Churchill, King

What can we learn from leaders of the past? A lot. There are biographies, autobiographies and movies about past leaders, some great and good, some notoriously bad. But there are ALWAYS lessons to be learned by the serious, modern candidate or executive aspiring to become The Person At The Top. Surely your purpose in reading this book is simple: you want to recognise the characteristics which will make YOU the next man at the top. It has 46 live links to websites you'd take years to discover on your own. Each website or film is crammed with in-depth knowledge of leaders and how they did what they did. This illustrated book is packed with wisdom gleaned from leaders of every stripe. The links to websites are where you can get extra information. Our stories about men at the top cover the big four categories: * politics * business * military * religion. You will improve your chances of personal success by not doing what some past leaders did. You need to know what to do and what NOT to do. Some of those old behaviours don't work in the 21st century! It's all explained. You'll discover how to learn from other people's mistakes. That's always quicker and cheaper than making the same mistakes yourself. Early cave-dweller leaders were only concerned about food, water, shelter, procreation, fighting off wild animals etc. There are lessons to be learned from them. Crazy military leaders often used their troops as cannon fodder and millions of people perished! Yes, there are lessons to unlearn from bad leaders. Religions have not fared much better, although religious leaders have been slightly more dutiful and caring than those in politics, the military or business. More lessons to learn. Yet when religious leaders abandoned their principles to follow the bias of their beliefs, they decimated many societies by wars, persecution and extremism. If you want the grisly details, check the websites listed. There are 46 LIVE LINKS. True leaders must have a vision. You'll learn about having a vision from the great visionaries of the past.
