

The Convictions of a Grandfather (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Convictions of a Grandfather
Whoever has set down his reflections as a married man and promulgated his opinions as a philosopher and attended his own silver wedding may be well preserved twenty years later, but is more than likely to be a grandfather and disposed to regard life from a patriarchal stand-point through gold-rimmed spectacles of wisdom. In my particular case the gold-rimmed spectacles are metaphorical. Yet I am a grandfather; and therefore the burden rests on me to demonstrate that my conclusions concerning what is or has been or is to be are not merely old fashioned, but that the fountain of perpetual youth still bubbles in an anatomy the arteries of which presumably have begun to harden.
